A Family Record is more than names, dates and places. It is about people_____ What they did, the Why and the How!

This booklet is the history of Egbert Mooney, and his descendants. It was compiled from available records, and the recollections of some of his older surviving descendants. This is my attempt to gather together in one place all the interesting and unusual aspects of our Mooney family's history.

I hope that you enjoy it.

Yvonne

I dedicate these efforts to Uncle Bob, Aunt Rhoda, Aunt Mary, and Aunt Lonie "Buck"; the surviving brother and sisters of my beloved Mother Minnie Mooney Sanford.

MOONEY

The name Mooney, occurs in two areas of North Carolina in the late 1700s and early 1800s. One family named Mooney, was in the Lincoln - Rutherford County area. These people moved to Northern Alabama and Georgia. The other Mooneys are in Bladen, Columbus and Brunswick Counties in the southeast section along the Atlantic Coast and the South Carolina border.

It is unknown whether the two families are connected, but the coastal Mooneys is the family which the Mooneys of Central Alabama and Central Mississippi descend.

William Mooney, Sr., who was in this area of Bladen, Columbus and Brunswick Counties, as early as the 1760s and served as a Justice Judge of Brunswick County, and an official of Columbus County when it was formed in 1808. William Mooney, Sr., had about eight daughters and four or five sons. According to early census records, he owned much land and many slaves in Columbus County, N.C. As of the 1800 census, William Mooney, Sr., seems to be the only one of his generation that is still living in the Bladen, Columbus, Brunswick area. He lived to be more than 90 years old and died in the mid-1830s. No record of his estate settlement has been found.

Three men named John Mooney and one named Thomas Mooney were also in the same area of North Carolina and are listed in the 1790 census. They all had sons. Records show that men named William Mooney, Thomas Mooney and John Mooney were in the Revolutionary War.

In the late 1820s, the Mooneys began migrating from North Carolina. William J. Mooney, Reuben Mooney, Egbert Mooney, and Joel Mooney are found in the 1830 census of Montgomery County, Alabama. Arthur Mooney is not found in the 1830 census, but land records show that he bought land in Lowndes County, next to Montgomery County in 1833. It has not been definitely proven that these four Mooneys are brothers, but they very well could have been. As records indicate, there is enough evidence that connects these four men, that leaves very little doubt but that they were closely associated.

Recorded information that definitely connects the following Mooneys is as follows:

1. William J. has been positively identified as a son of William Mooney Sr. of Bladen, Brunswick, and Columbus N.C. This has been proved through a deed of gift of a slave.

2. Arthur Mooney ____witnessed the deed of gift of slave to William J. Mooney.

3. Census of 1830 show that William J. Mooney, Rueben Mooney, Egbert Mooney and Joel Mooney are all living in Montgomery County, ALA. Arthur Mooney is not found in the 1830 census. However, land records show that he was a resident of nearby Lowndes County, ALA. in the mid-1830s.

4. Census of 1840 shows that Rueben Mooney and Joel Mooney also lived in Lowndes County. By then William J., a Justice of the Peace in Montgomery County, ALA had been murdered. (Refer to the story on The Mooney War on pages 13 through 20.

5. In the late 1840s, Reuben Mooney and Arthur Mooney have brought their families to live in Leake County, Mississippi. Arthur died in Leake County, Miss. in 1850. Reuben lived until 1880. Living with Reuben Mooney (as listed in the U.S. census for the years 1840 and 1850) is a woman old enough to be his mother. She is identified as M. Mooney. In earlier records there was a Mary Mooney living in Columbus County, N.C. as a head of household with four children. William Mooney, Sr. seems related to her, as he is made responsible for her expenses in a court case.

6. John R. Mooney and his family is living in Pike County, ALA. at the same time that Egbert, Reuben, William J., Arthur and Joel are in the nearby counties of Montgomery and Lowndes. In the early 1850s we find Egbert Mooney, also living in Pike County, ALA. Two of the sons of John R. Mooney were named John and Arthur. Egbert Mooney was named as "next friend" for a minor named John Mooney, in a civil suit in Montgomery County in the 1840s. It has not been found in any records that Egbert had a son named John. So there may be a connection here to this family.
Many people from Columbus and Bladen Counties, N.C. moved to Pike County, ALA. in the 1820s and 1830s.

7. Many of the children of the above mentioned Mooneys had names in common, as is shown in the summary on the following page.

8. All the afore-mentioned Mooneys gave their place of birth as North Carolina, as found in the U.S. census.

All of them left North Carolina about the same time and all arrived in Alabama at the same time and settled near each other.

EGBERT MOONEY

The first record of Egbert Mooney is in Montgomery County, Alabama., when he is married to Sarah B. Adams on 24 of October 1829. The 1830, 1840, and 1850 censuses of Montgomery County shows that the family has increased to six children. They include Albert, Frances E., Reuben, Kenyon H., Mahala, and Nancy E. The records also indicate that Egbert and Sarah had a daughter born between 1836-1840, who died before the 1850 census. In 1852 George M. was born.

In the June term, of State Supreme Court in Montgomery, ALA., a writ of error was filed in a case styled Mooney vs Ivey. The defendant is indebted to John Mooney for work and labor done. The suit was brought by John Mooney through his "next friend", Egbert Mooney. Mention of the case was found in Gandrud Collection, Vol. 202, page 85, but the case was never found in research of court records at the State Archives and the Supreme and County Courts. Records do not show that Egbert had a son John, therefore John might be a close relative who is not of age.

Sarah died in the early 1850s in Montgomery County and Egbert subsequently married Nancy C. Johns, who was born in Alabama (according to information from 1860 and 1870 censuses). However, in the 1880 census, Nancy gives Georgia as her place of birth. Sarah B. Adams (Egbert's first wife) was born in Georgia (according to the 1850 census).

Egbert Mooney and Nancy C. Johns were married in Pike County, Alabama, 29 April 1854. Shortly thereafter the family moved to Jones County, Mississippi. The following children are the offspring of Egbert and Nancy C. Johns; Sarah L.J.W., Samuel Egbert, Marion (male), Eliza and John. The 1880 census shows John as 8 years old, which would give him a birthdate of about 1872. His tombstone, however, shows 1868.

Egbert died in 1882.

Nancy died in 1894.

It is believed by some of the Egbert Mooney descendants that Grandpa Egbert lived to be about 105 years of age. I do not know. All available records seem to indicate otherwise. Taking into consideration all the recorded information, it seems that he would have been between the age of 80 or 85 years, when he died. Both he and his second wife, Nancy C. Johns are buried in Bullock Cemetery, Sanford, Miss.

John Franklin Mooney told his grandson, Curtis Mooney, that Egbert Mooney and Nancy Johns Mooney both died under unusual circumstances. Egbert died on his birthday, having strangled to death on wild bee honey. Nancy was struck by lightening at her home, as she stood under a pecan tree, eating watermelon. According to John Franklin Mooney, his oldest brother Rufus (Dolphus) was near her. Two other people have been able to confirm that Nancy was indeed struck by lightening. Wilmer Mooney remembered the story exactly as Uncle John related it. Rhoda Mooney Bullock (daughter of Rufus Mooney) recalled that it was a Chinaberry tree. They did not remember having heard the story of Grandpa Egbert's death. I am so glad that Curtis was interested in family at such a young age. Had he not been, it is possible that this "gem" of family history would have been lost forever. I am so grateful that he shared this information with me. Ru[illegible] (Dolphus) and John Franklin were grandsons of Egbert and Nancy C. Mooney. Their father was Samuel Egbert Mooney.

Also in Curtis Mooney's possession, was part of a letter written many years ago, by Marion Adney (Uncle Polly) Mooney in which he wrote, "Grandmother was Nancy Caroline Johns. Egbert Mooney was our Granddaddy. Mother was Rhoda Bullock. Daddy was Samuel Egbert Mooney. Our Grandmother Caroline was the Indian and was from Alabama."

On the following pages are two accounts of the Mooney War. I include it because of its interest and for the sake of genealogical research since there might be someone who reads this booklet, that decides to search further into our family history.

The first account is a copy of an old newspaper article of which the first page was missing. The second account of the war was written in longhand by W.G. Robertson in 1916. I have chose to include a type-written copy of his recollections because the ink is so faded that it did not reproduce very satisfactorily. This document also has part of it missing (the last page). But enough of the two documents are intact that it makes reading them worth while.

The William Mooney written about in the articles is the son of William Mooney, Sr., of the area of North Carolina from which Egbert Mooney came from. It can't be proved as of yet, but there is a strong possibility that William could have been a brother of our Grandpa Egbert. (Refer to pages 1 and 2)

I have copied Mr. Robertson's story just as he has recorded it punctuations, spelling and all. Any editing would change the whole personality of the story.

the city violence. Although citizens later remembered their town as rather quiet and unusually civilized by comparison with other frontier communities, visitors were appalled at the violence, much of it associated with politics. One traveler who visited the city commented: "The life of man has very little value in this lately erected place; the mixed composition of the population gives rise to many frightful deeds, which in other towns would be severely punished by the authorities, but are here perpetrated without any serious consequences." Even local folk became alarmed at the frequency of acrimonious confrontations. The editor of The Montogomery Republican wrote in 1823: "From the many bloody and serious encounters that have taken place in this town, I am induced to believe that our citizens certainly possess the most war-like dispositions of any people in the civilized world. Scarcely a day passes, but these champions of the fist and skull display their dexterity.

Harriet Martineau, an aristocratic English traveler and writer visited the town in April, 1835, found conditions little improved. One of her hosts recently had been stabbed in the back while perusing a book in Montgomery's reading room. Another resident carried loaded pistols against threatened assassination. Shortly before her arrival, a Montgomerian had been shot three times from ambush and killed . One woman confided that hardly a day had passed during her four years residence without an attempt on someone's life. Martineau pronounced the state of Montgomery society fearful, and believed her written sketch had presented an accurate portrait of life "in the wilder districts of of the South."

Had Martineau tarried a few months longer, the city's volatile population would have provided additional evidence for her conclusion. Montgomery was already justly famous for the intensity of its political divisions, and feelings ran high as national elections approached. Even officers of the local volunteer-militia units were chosen on the basis of party affiliation. During the summer of 1836, one of these units held its annual muster about nine miles from the city. Colonel Thomas Mastin, prominent Montgomery Democrat leader, commanded the company, but it enrolled many Whigs, including Bush W. Bell and his two nephews. Following drills, the Bells invited Mastin to their tent, where a heated argument ensued. Edward Bell, one of the nephews, became so outraged that he unsheathed a knife and stabbed Mastin to death.

Although acquitted in a trial conducted in the predominantly Whig city, the Bells did not escape Democratic retaliation. William Mooney and son, Kenyon, lived in the country nearby and were fervent Democrats. While in town one day in 1836, the Mooney's encountered the Bells at Montgomery Hall. A desperate and bloody battle followed in which Bush killed William Mooney, and Kenyon Mooney fatally wounded Edward Bell. Bush Bell fled the city but Mooney was arrested, made bond, and was soon in trouble again.

Still in a sullen mood, Kenyon Mooney attended another militia muster at Scoggins Hill, stabbed Allister Owens to death, then casually mounted his horse and rode away. A posse, dispatched from Montgomery found young Mooney barricaded in his mother's house, prepared for a siege. Having no stomach for a risky frontal assault, the posse sent back to the town for a cannon and ammunition with which to breach the house. Before the cannon reached its destination, Mooney's friends, unhappy with the occurrence, waylaid the team and badly wounded one of the posse. In the ensuing confusion, Mooney escaped into a nearby swamp.

Obviously they had underestimated the quarry, so Montgomery officials next dispatched the best troops from the county's volunteer militia company, the Montgomery "Invincibles." Unfortunately, they did not live up to their name. Young Mooney, hiding at the home of a friend in the southern part of the county, was alerted by slaves and rode his horse full gallop through a hail of misdirected gunfire, leaving nothing behind, save his hat for a trophy. That was the last seen or heard of Kenyon Mooney.

THE MOONEY WAR

An Account by W.G. Robertson

About fifty six years ago when Politics was at fever heat and the political lines so tightly drawn that a brother if a Democrat and a candidate would not be voted for by a Whig brother and neighbors on the very best of personel terms would not be voted for by each other. The militia of the county was well organised at the time. The Generals, the Majors, the Colonels and Captains were elected by a direct vote of the people. Every male person between the ages of eighteen and forty five years of age was required to do Military duty or pay a fine. The people at that time was threatened with an Indian war on every side. The Siminols in Florida and Creek in Alabama were in a hostile attitude.

At that time there was a regmental muster held about eight or nine miles south of Montgomery out in the prairie directly on the public road leading from Montgomery to Troy. Col. Thomas Mastin was then the commanding officer, he was a splendid looking officer in his uniform and espesely on his fine Charger. He was a Democrat very popular with his party and a leader in the same. A gentleman by the name of B.W. Bell and his nephews was with some of their friends went from Montgomery out to that muster and took a tent with them (the weather was quite warm) and pitched their tent on the muster field they had with them their luncheon for every comfort that they needed they were Whigs and very popular with their party and leaders in the same. When the muster was over Mastin went to Bells tent I think by invitation and they soon got in a political dispute. Mastin said somthing about the Whig party that Edward Bell took acception ot Bell said something that Mastin took acceptions. They got in a political scramble and then a fight, Bell yanked out his Bowie knife killed Mastin before their friends could sepporate them. Mastin was cut down in the full bloom of manhood surrvived by a host of friends and a nice wife and two little children, a son and daughter.

Now this killing was not premeditated not malice a forthought. Bell did not go out to that muster to kill any one, they went out to injoy a day in the country. If there was any personal animosity between them I never heard of it. The killing was purely political in the heat of passion without time for reflection.

Bell went back to town and surrended himself to Temp Reid then Sheriff of the county, gave bond for his appearance at the circuit court to answer the charge of murder for killing Mastin and before the day of trial Bell and his friends employed the best legal talent to be found. Col. Tom Williams who was located in Mobile and had the reputation of being the best criminal lawyer in the state was retained by Bell as his principle councel and at the trial Bell was acquited.

Mastins family and immediate friends done every thing legally to secure Bells conviction but failed. They being law abiding gentlemen let the matter drop.

But unfortunately it did not stop here. William Mooney with his family resided about twenty miles in the south eastern portion of the county from the city of Montgomery. He was a Democrat a man of very high prejudices that loved his friends and hated his enemies and that could not tolerate a political opponent. A man of some prominence in his vicinity, his son Kinyon (Kenyon) who was about the average young man of his day, rather popular with his associates, not charged with any wrong doing. He had a good pius mother, a member of the Baptist Church , two or three interesting sisters that married and done well, one only brother that was a model man all his life. Kinyon married Amenitice McCullock a beautiful girl, they had one child, a daughter. Kin, as he was called engaged in politics and followed the fortunes of his father. Now I am of the opinion that if Bell had killed Mastin in a fight over some private mater between them, the Mooneys would not have interfeared but as their political friend had been killed in a political fight about politics, by a Whig, they determind to avenge. I dont know whether or not that the Bells had ben put on their guard against the Mooneys. I think they were as both sides was sufficently armed . They met in the city at or near the Montgomery Hall then and there engaged in a deadly combat. In that fight young Bush Bell killed William Mooney and Kin Mooney killed Edward Bell (Mastins slayer). Bell had no family. Bells dead body was taking in charge by his friends. There was no undertaking establishments at the time. Mooneys body was sent home to his wife and children to be buried. Kin was sent to jail and Bush left the country. In a few days, Mooneys friends, for he had friends and a plenty of them, baled him out of jail and he went home to his family.

In a short time after this there was another muster, this time at Scoggin Hill about one mile east of Robertsons X roads. I recon you begin to think that we didnt do any thing in them days but muster but that is a mistake. We did have a little time to work between these musters. At that muster in the fore noon Mooney rides up, hiches his horse, walk up to the croud very quietly and peaceably but armed to the teeth with his pistols and Bowie Knife. There was an old ladie on the ground with a cake cart with ginger cakes to sell. Mooney took up at that cart and a man by the name of Allister Owens when he got ready to go home went to that cart to buy some cakes to take home to his children. Mooney with out any appearant provication took his Bowie Knife and run it into that poor mans bowells, cut him down and when he fell some cried out go for the Doctor he said if you bring a Doctor here I kill him as soon as he arrives. But he changed his notion, got on his horse and left. No one tried to arrest or stop him. It would have been death to have attempted such a thing. Owen was dead when the Doctor arrived. Owen was one of the most inoffencive men I ever new. Every one thought that Mooney would leave the country at once but strange to say he did not. He went back home as if nothing happened.

Now when it was learned that Mooney had not left but was at home, a bench warrent was issued against him chargeing him with murder in the first degree for the wilful killing of Owen. This warrent was put in the hands of the Sheriff who give it into the hands of one of his most trusted Deptities and summond a large posse of the most respectable citizens of Montgomery to go and hunt Mooney up and arrest him alive, if they could, but dead if they must. This is what the warrant arthorises an officer to do.

Some of Mooneys friends found out that the Sheriff was after him and let Mooney know . He then had plenty of time to leave, but refused to do so, prefered to remain and defend himself as best he could. He barecaded himself in his mothers house, bard up the doors and windows. This of course gave his mother a great deal of trouble and uneasiness. But she could not help it. When the Sheriff and his posse arrived, they learned that he was in the house and demanded his surrender. He sent them word that he would do no such thing and the first man that put his head in at one of them doors or windows, he would kill him. Now these gentlemen were too prudent and sensible to attemp any such foolish thing for it would have been death. Now these men were at their wits end. They could not do any thing with their small arms and to back to town and report to the Sheriff that they left him in his mothers house would not begin to do. So they held a Council of War and decided to send back to town and get a canon and a sufficient quantity of powder and balls and canonade the house down, and let the inmate come out or stay in and take the chances as they saw proper. They selected Phillip Raiford and Theodrick Ruddle to go back to town and get the canon. They went, procured the canon and amunition , got a wagon, put the canon in the wagon and started for Seat of War. But some of his friends found out that the canon was a coming and way laid the road and when the wagon got near the house, they shot into them and badly wounded Raiford and made the horse run away with the wagon and scared Ruddles nearly to death. Now in the bustle and confusion and excitement of Raiford being shot and the horse running away with the wagon, Mooney made his escape. Now these men were not to be blamed. They done all that they could do and nothing remained for them to do but to take the canon and their wounded and go back to town and report to the sheriff.

Now everyone thought that Mooney would leave the country for good but he done no such thing, and the ends not yet. It was never known who shot Raiford.

The next news of Mooney, he was in the Pintlalla neighborhood in the south western portion of the county. There was at that time a military volunteer company near Robertson X Roads with about sixty members. Now when the Sheriff heard that Mooney was still in the county he ordered the Captain of this company, James R. Dilliard, now in the post office, was the Captain of this company, to get up his company and go and arrest Mooney. The name of this company was the Prairie Invincibles. Now I suppose from the name youd immagin that they were equal to any immergancy. Well the Captain had courage and manhood enough to obey all and every order. So he flew round and got up sixteen of the company (now Mooney you have got one or two things to do. You have got to surrender to these Invincibles or leave the country) he got the Company together, armed them the best he could and started in persuit of Mooney. I was one of the company. We left the cross roads about dark. The moon was just up. I never saw a brighter moon lite night than that night was. We first went to Athens and at that neighborhood enquired at every place and every house but could hear nothing of our man that we were hunting. Then we went to Tuckers Store and search that neighborhood but could hear nothing of Mooney. We then held a little Council of War. There was a man by the name of Dick Colbert living about four miles from Tuckers in the direction of Pintlalla. He was a batchalor and we enquired if Mooney was any whare in the country. He was at Colberts. We started for Colberts. On our way there was three of our men that stragled or got lost. I suppose in all armies there are moreor less straglers. So it was with us. Well the ballance that was left went to Calberts. Now a man of some property. There was a wide lane running through his land and right on the lane was a gin house and an old fashion wood screw. And about one hundred and fifty yards below the gin was the dwelling. When we rode up to the screw there was two Negro fellows sitting at the screw and when they saw us they turned that screw, which made a considerable noise. We ask boys is any body down at the house. They said there was. Who is it? And they said it was Mr. Kin Mooney and Mr. Charlie Spratt. That screw was turned to give the alarm. We hesatated a few minutes to deside what to do. We desided to dismount, tie our horses, surround the house and ketch him asleep. But no they had got the alarm, had their horses saddled and hitched in the yard and when we got ready to go down to the house, we saw them mount their horses and the Negroes threw open the gate and the fastest riding I ever saw done, they Mooney and Spratt came in abreast and rode right through that gate and made their escape. There was eight guns fired at them but they went so fast I dont think either was hit. We got one of their hats, that was all. They met the straglers that was following about half mile, they were going as fast as their horses could carry them and as they passed, they hollowed to the straglers who goes there? They hollowed back, friends. Spratt was Mooneys particular friend. Why Mooney killed Owen has always been a mistry to me. He was not drunk. I dont think he was in the habit of geting drunk_____(The account ends here as the last page of the article was missing)

DO NOT CIRCULATE

I find the following court case totally fascinating___A skirmish between another Mooney and a Owens. "Hawk" is probably a nickname for Hawkins. The Kenyon Mooney involved in the Mooney War was named Kenyon Hawkins Mooney. Could these two persons involved in the below case be sons of Kenyon Mooney and Allister Owens, whom he murdered? Seems too much coincidence for there not to be some connection. Perhaps bad blood still surged between the two families.

[INDICTMENT FOR ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO MURDER.]

1. Intent as affected by drunkenness.—Although drunkenness is no excuse for a crime, it may produce a state of mind which would render a party incapable of forming or entertaining the intention which is a material ingredient of the statutory offense of an assault with intent to murder.
2. Prior assault as defense.—A prior assault on the prisoner, by the person whom he is alleged to have assaulted, is not necessarily a defense, since the injury inflicted by the prisoner may not have been justified by the necessity of the case, nor proportioned to the injury inflicted on him.
3. Conviction of less offense than charged in the indictment.—Under an indictment for an assault with intent to murder, the failure of the prosecution to prove the special intent charged does not necessarily entitle the defendant to an acquittal, since he may nevertheless be convicted of a simple assault and battery.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of Pike.
Tried before the Hon. ROBERT DOUGHERTY.

THE prisoner in this case, Hawk Mooney, was indicted for an assault on one Isaiah M. Owens, with intent to murder him; pleaded not guilty; was convicted and sentenced to five years imprisonment in the penitentiary. "On the trial," as the bill of exceptions states, "the State proved, that Jeremiah Owens, upon whom the assault was alleged to have been committed, passed along where the prisoner, a youth, was crying, and asked him what was the matter; that the prisoner replied, one —— had imposed on him; that said Owens, gently taking hold of the prisoner, said he would see about it; and that the prisoner thereupon struck him with a knife, inflicting a severe wound upon the chin. It was proved, also, that the prisoner had been drinking, and was very intoxicated at the time said act was done; but that he had once afterwards declared that he had intended to kill said Owens, and expressed regret that he had not succeeded in doing so. It was in evidence, also, that said Owens and the prisoner never had any previous difficulty or bad feelings between them. Upon this state of facts, the prisoner's counsel asked the court to instruct the jury as follows:

"1. That if they believed from the evidence that the defendant, at the time of the commission of the act, was too drunk to form a design to take the life of Owens, then they could not find him guilty of an assault with intent to murder.

"2. That if they believe from the evidence that Owens first assaulted the defendant, by laying hands upon him, then the defendant had the right to repel the assault, and cannot be convicted of an assault on Owens.

"3. That before the defendant can be convicted of an assault with intent to murder, the jury must be satisfied, beyond all reasonable doubt, that he intended to take life; and if they believe from the evidence that he was too much intoxicated at the time to have entertained any such intention, they must find him not guilty."

The court refused each of these charges, and the defendant excepted.

PUGH & BULLOCK, for the prisoner.

M. A. BALDWIN, Attorney-General, contra.

A. J. WALKER, C. J.—The specific intent to commit murder is an essential ingredient of the crime of an assault with intent to commit murder. To a conviction of that crime it is indispensable that the existence of such intent should be proved.—Ogletree v. The State, 28 Ala. 693; Seitz v. The State, 23 Ala. 42. Drunkenness certainly does not excuse or palliate any offense. But it may produce a state of mind, in which the accused would be totally incapable of entertaining or forming the positive and particular intent requisite to make out the offense. In such a case, the accused is entitled to an acquittal of the felony, not because of his drunkenness, but because he was in a state of mind, resulting from drunkenness, which affords a negation of one of the facts necessary to his conviction.—Amer. Criminal Law, § 41; Wharton's Law of Homicide, 368; 14 Ohio, 555; Swan v. The State, 4 Humph. R. 136; Pertle v. The State, 9 Humph. 663; Pennsylvania v. McFall, Addison, 255; 1 Baldwin, 514; Haile v. The State, 11 Humph. 154.

The decision in Bullock v. The State, 13 Ala. 413, was made without detecting the error in the printing of the statute by substituting "attempt" for "intent." That error was not exposed, nor the true reading of the statute declared, until the State v. Marshall, 14 Ala. 411, was decided. The reasoning and authorities adduced by the court in the State v. Bullock sustain the conclusion which we have expressed.

The court erred in the refusal to give the first charge asked.

[2.] The court committed no error in the refusal of the second charge, because it made a previous assault upon the accused a complete defense, notwithstanding the injury inflicted by the prisoner was out of all proportion to the injury inflicted on him, and not called for by the necessities of the occasion.—Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, 1253, 1258.

[3.] The third charge was also properly refused. The absence of an intent to murder did not, of itself, entitle the accused to a verdict of not guilty. Notwithstanding the jury might have found there was no such intention, he might have been guilty of an assault and battery, and been convicted of it.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed, and the cause remanded; and the prisoner must remain in custody, until discharged by due course of law.

GREETING:

You are hereby authorized to celebrate the rites of matrimony between Eggbert Mooney and Sarah B. Adams and this shall be your sufficient authority for so doing.

Given under my hand and seal this 24th day of October A.D. one thousand eight hundred and twenty nine and of American Independence the 54th year.

W. Moody, Register

I was unable to gather any personal information about Grandpa Egbert Mooney. Everyone who could have shared any intimate stories about him have been dead for many years. I don"t think that his grand-children knew anything about him. I came to this conclusion after reading notes witten by Uncle "Polly" Mooney.

From records that I was able to locate, we can be certain that LIFE seemed unusually harsh to Egbert Mooney. His first wife Sarah B. Adams died at a fairly early age. Records also seem to bear out the fact that he and Sarah had a daughter that died very young. It is a known fact that within the short period of about two months, his three oldest sons had either died or disappeared (and presumed dead). Albert was killed by a Captain of the Confederate Army. Kenyon died of disease, while serving with the Confederate Army. Rueben disappeared. He also, was serving with the Confederacy and was left in the hospital at Iuka Springs. He was never heard from after that time by either his family or the company to which he was assigned. It is presumed that he died. His living descendants, do not know unto this day just what did happen to him. It is possible he deserted, leaving his family to start a new life.

NOTES:

I was unable to locate any living descendants of Samuel Egbert Mooney that could recall anything personal about him. However, it is a different story, of his wife "Granny" Rhoda Ann. Almost everyone that remembered her, could do so quite vividly.

I did not know this "Granny" of mine but have come to the conclusion that she did not fit the mold of a "Sweet lil' ole' Grandma." It can be surmised from the following recollections, that she was a very difficult person to live with, and at times cruel to both animals and children alike. It is not known if she was always "unpleasant", or if she was thus so, only in her later years.

When I asked Uncle Bob Mooney what he remembered most about his Granny, when he had an occasion to go to her home, he promptly replied, "You boys don't come in this house!!! Git out there in that lane."

Zeda Mooney Miller remembers that as a very young girl, she was out in the yard when she noticed there was an old hard shell bug clinging to her skirt. Terrified, and desperate to get it off her clothing, she was dancing a jig; all the time frantically brushing and swatting. When she finally did remove it, she ran into the house and got some matches. Returning to where the unsuspecting bug lay on the ground, she covered it with the matches and lit them. Aunt Cora noticed what was happening and soundly spanked her bottom; admonishing with every lick, "Don't you ever do such a thing again. I'll not have you to grow up and be as mean as your "Granny".

Aunt Cora was perhaps referring to instances in which Granny Rhoda Ann was known to have been cruel to animals. From the recollections of Myrtle Mooney Riels, Dessie Ree Mooney Crosby, and Lois Sanford Carr, neither "fowl nor friend" were safe from Granny's wrath, if either happened to get her "dander up".

Woe be unto any bird that made the mistake of selecting Granny's garden spot to get its sustenance for the day. For if she could capture the bird, (which on occasion she was able to do), she would tie it to a stake and let it starve to death.

Both Uncle Bob Mooney and Dessie Ree both remembered that as long as Granny lived, the farmers didn't have to worry about "dry spells". Granny, the rainmaker, had a a tried and true solution (or so she believed). She would catch a frog and secure its legs with twine and hang the poor thing from the limb of a tree. Maybe the downpours that resulted because of her ritual, is the reason that torrential rains are described as "Frog Strangler's." I suspect she suspended the frog with its head Heavenward so that if it did not die from natural causes, it would meet its fate when the rains came. I am sure that the rains did come, aren't you?

After the death of Grandpa Samuel Egbert, Rhoda Ann lived with her son John Franklin and his family for over 15 years. Once when she was preparing supper, Dessie Ree, was in the kitchen with her. Like any hungry child, Dessie Ree, decided she could not wait until the food was on the table. The sweet aroma of the hot cornbread that had just been removed from the oven, was too much to resist. She unceremoniously took a pinch and the old lady was so enraged, that she grabbed the child's hand and placed it on the hot skillet. I have not interviewed any of the other children of Uncle John's. I imagine, however, the older ones would also have stories to share. Even though I don't see how Granny would have had time to bother the other ones; as it seemed as though she had a full time job, just keeping Dessie Ree in line.

Life was not much better for the two daughters-in law, who were gracious enough to share their home. After having lived with John Franklin and his wife "Donie" Sanford she lived with Marion Adney "Polly" and his wife Nora Mae Thompson. It is with them that she was living when she died. Times were very hard and any money that the farm wife was able to "come by", more than likely came from her "Layers" (laying chickens). Time after time Aunt Donie would order a few biddies, with the hope of raising enough of them to have a good supply of eggs and some hens to occasionally fill the "stewpot". If she were fortunate enough to have more eggs than the family needed, she could sell the extra ones____thus having "egg money", to be used at her discretion. It would not be long however, that Granny would claim the biddies as her own. She not only refused to share the eggs that HER layers produced, but sold all of the eggs for HER "egg money". Hope springs eternal, however, and when more "layers" were needed, Aunt "Donie" would order more biddies; only to be rewarded with the same results. Had not Aunt Donie been the easy going, gentle soul as I remember her, things might not have been as easy for her Mother-in-law.

After she went to live with Uncle Polly and Aunt Nora, their children didn't "fare" much better than the children of Uncle John's and Aunt Donie's. I feel certain that by this time, Dessie Ree, for one was counting HER blessings. For whatever the reason that Granny went to live with Uncle Polly and Aunt Nora, Dessie Ree must have been glad to share her Granny with her cousins, Rhoda Mae, Myrtle, and Hulon.

Myrtle said that Grandma did quite a bit of handwork and carried her needle in her apron pocket. One would probably assume that the reason for this would be for its safe keeping____a needle being an absolute necessity for running a household. However, Myrtle was convinced that it was for the sole purpose of tormenting little innocent children. For it never failed, when she was within reach of Granny, she got stuck with that needle. Or so it seemed at the time.

My sister, Lois Sanford Carr, told me that even though she remembers this Granny, she does not recall any stories about her first hand. But she does remember others telling the story of her sewing up the eyes of one of her old "settin' hens". It seems that the old hen had just hatched a brood of biddies and kept rejecting them and in the process was trying to kill them. Now having not taken after my Great Grandma, I am no chicken farmer, so I can not tell you, what reasoning was behind this "new Mother's" actions. But since the Mother Hen seemed bent on destroying her future source of income, the battle lines were drawn. Armed with her ever faithful needle, she lost no time in threading it and before that old hen could "bat an eye", Grandma had doomed it to a life of blindness, having sewed up its eyes, then and there. Now if true, I bet that was a sight to see. I don't have any reason to doubt it_____and Myrtle did say that Grandma was mighty handy with her needle.

Still such a horrid story makes me wonder if Lois just ate too many crabapples that day and suffered from a terrible dream from which, when she awakened, she thought it had actually happened.

A few years before Grandpa Samuel Egbert died, it is said that there developed a deep bitterness between them, and they lived in the same house without speaking a word between them. The youngest son, Marion Adney, was living at home. Aunt Rhoda told me that if they had anything to say to each other she would say "'Polly" tell him so and so". Her husband would say, "And you tell her this and that." Poor child, no wonder that Uncle Polly was said not to have been very talkative when he got older. He had done "said" everything there was to say.

Samuel Egbert died in 1911, from Tuberculosis. He is buried in Bullock Cemetery, Sanford, Mississippi. When Rhoda Ann died seventeen years later, she was still so bitter, that she gave specific instructions that she was NOT to be buried next to her husband. For this reason she is buried in the plot directly behind Samuel Egbert.

Now, wouldn't you know it!!! Just when I thought I had Grandma all figured out, along comes Rhoda Mae! I was visiting her yesterday, and asked her what she could tell me about her. "Well, she was good to me and I loved her dearly, and she loved me". Ahh, at last! Someone who could testify that Granny had a soft spot after all. Rhoda Mae continued, "When we kids could be out playing, Granny would call me into the house, and without the others knowing, she would slip me something good to eat." Now, just how was Rhoda Mae able to play upon her heart strings, when all the other grandchildren, had failed to learn the tune? Even Rhoda Mae, did not know; only supposed that she had favorites. Perhaps it was because Rhoda Mae was her namesake.

Jan,

This is some information on the Eggbert Mooney family. They were living in Montgomery Co., Ala in 1850 and in Jones Co., Ms in 1840. They are listed in the Jones County Book. They later moved to Covington Co. I thought it might be helpful. Regena
